There is a very unfortunate tradition right now which says that you should not keep Shiva in your house. They are right, you should never keep Shiva in your house; you have to keep him in your heart. Keeping him in your house is of no use.

One reason why this has been said is, this energy is towards your dissolution, it is for you to reach your highest peak. This energy is not for begging for something and getting a little more advantage out of life. This energy is only for those who are seeking to reach the very peak of their consciousness. If you are only concerned about getting a little more advantage out of life, there are many other smaller deities, not Mahadeva, not Shambho; he is not suitable. If you go to the highest, ultimate power in the existence, you must go with a petition for the highest possibility. You cannot go with small things to the big man.

That is why they told you, if you are limiting yourself to small things in life, don’t keep Shiva in your house. If you are seeking for the highest, you should keep him, but not in your house. Locking him up in the pooja room will not work because you cannot lock him up. If you have the courage, carry him in your heart.
