

THIS WEEK'S HIGHLIGHTS

You are not logged in | Free Registration

CEOs don't trust HR
CEOs doubt their HR departments are up to the job of managing talent

A matter of trust
Far too many companies have lost their customers' trust

What went wrong?
What's the real reason that so many big projects fail?

His business is Happiness

05 Dec 2005 | Management Issues News

Leadership. Management Thinking.

 Back a page

 Add to clippings

 Print this

 Email this

THE BLOG

"No matter how big a chief executive you are, you are never in full control. Not even dictators are in full control."

According to Indian business guru Sadhguru Jaggi Vasudev, who seems to have something of a fan club among the world's top CEOs, this lack of control creates fear, and fear creates wrong decisions and wrong decisions create disasters. "If you cannot manage your own mind, how can you manage the world?...If you master your inner energy, you are 100 per cent in control of your life."

"...Karma is the software of God, but you can change it," he says.

The Independent | At the feet of the business guru in a saffron turban

Add to My AOL, MyYahoo, Google, Bloglines

Register now for our FREE Newsletter

SOMETHING TO SAY ABOUT THIS? TELL US HERE

“ Join the debate! Click here to add your comment ”

RELATED ITEMS SINCE THIS BLOG FIRST APPEARED

-  Happiness is the key to success
-  Lessons in happiness
-  Money can't buy happiness
-  Most Britons happy in their work

RELATED ITEMS

EARLIER ARTICLES

We don't have any other relevant articles

EXTERNAL LINKS

We have no other relevant links

Latest News & Research

- Less pay, more training
- Seven out of 10 fear retirement poverty
- Training going global, but the money stays at home
- Paying through the nose for talent
- Tempted to lie on your resume? We'll spot it and boot you out
- Apprenticeships give a leg-up on the management ladder
- Britain at a regulatory tipping point